Classical Social Theory

Sociology continues to be influenced and guided by the work of a particular group of social theorists. The questions they raised about the nature and ethos of our collective coexistence, as well as the way each proposed they be answered, continues to provide the theoretical framework within which much of sociology is presently pursued. This course will provide an overview of the historical context out of which Sociology emerged as a discipline, committed as it was (and is still) to examining and confronting the troubling consequences of society's turn towards the modern era, with particular emphasis on the parallel developments of industrialization and capitalism.

The aim of this course is not to provide exhaustive coverage of the whole range of social thinkers who contributed to the development of the field. Rather, we will focus on the works of 4 key theorists whose writings have contributed in important and lasting ways to the establishment of sociology's primary theoretical directions. They are, Emile Durkheim, Karl Marx, Max Weber and Georg Simmel. We will examine in particular how each viewed the social world they were a part of and deeply concerned for. In addition, one of the main objectives of the course is to develop how each of their perspectives' implicitly recommends a particular understanding of what it means to live a socially responsible life. The second main objective is to promote the capacity for critical social awareness through the practices of writing, active reading and interpreting of their main ideas and theoretical commitments.

Texts

There is one main text for this course:

Capitalism and Classical Sociological Theory by John Bratton, David Denham, and Linda Deutschmann (Toronto: UTP, 2009).

This book is currently available at the university bookstore. It will be supplemented by additional readings from key theoretical texts by each of the theorists and made available at the reserve desk of the library. The books these additional readings will be taken from are as follows:

Emile Durkheim. The Rules of Sociological Method. Edited with an introduction by Steven Lukes, translated by W. D. Halls (The Free Press, 1982).

Karl Marx. The Marx-Engels Reader. Edited by T. B. Bottomore (Norton, 1972).

Max Weber. From Max Weber: Essays in Sociology. Edited and translated by H. H. Gerth and C. Wright Mills (Oxford, 1958).

Georg Simmel. The Sociology of Georg Simmel. Edited and translated by Kurt H. Wolf (The Free Press, 1964).

Evaluation

The course work will consist of a series of written exercises aimed at systematically developing a theoretically critical approach to the material covered in class. The exercises will be worth an increasing amount as the course progresses, as indicated below. There will also be an assessment for class participation. Note that the final exam in this course is a take-home exam.

1 First written exercise.....	15%
2 Take-home written assignments.....	20% & 25%
1 Final examination.....	30%
Class Participation.....	10%

Class Format

The class format and the speed at which the material is covered will be open for revision as the course develops, depending on the class' progress and facility with the material. However, the aim will always be to pursue the work within the context of open class discussions and exercises, in addition to lectures and presentations.

Please Note: Attendance is especially important for this course, as the in-class discussion facilitates an enhanced appreciation of the texts and is essential to the spirit of the course objectives. However, attendance is considered a prerequisite for, and not the substance of, the class participation mark indicated above.

Office Hours

My office is in room 9-C in the Annex. Office hours are as follows:

Tuesday	2:30 to 4:00
Wednesday	12:00 to 2:00

There will be times when I am unable to be in the office during the posted office hours due to committee and department meetings or unforeseen circumstances. If this happens, please leave a message and I will get back to you as soon as possible. Other times can be arranged by appointment if you are unable to make those listed. Contact me by phone or through e-mail with course-related questions or to arrange a meeting.
